Great ideas often spring from trying to solve a problem. Such is the case with the new patented E-Z Handlyn gooseneck trailer adapter. For years, horsepeople from all over the world have had to deal with the back breaking strain of hooking up the trailer. In order to hook and unhook the gooseneck trailers, one must reach down to "pull that pin," while holding the base into position. With spring loaded trailer assemblies, this can be even more challenging - and you might slam your finger in it! So life-long horseman Lynn Presidio has developed a simple, easy adaptor that will take the effort out of the trailer hookup process!

Wanting to make it easier for his wife and daughter to hook up the trailer, Lynn came up with the design of having a bar that you slide which will pull the pin from the base. With this engineering, the operator doesn't have to bend over at all - they can control the trailer assembly from a standing position. This gives the operator leverage and eliminates the possibility of injuries like back strain or lost fingers from the slamming spring loaded mechanism! So, the E-Z Handlyn was developed, and has just now come to the equestrian market in the past year.

There are no special tools required to put the E-Z Handlyn onto the trailers, and the device fits most gooseneck jacks. Using the E-Z Handlyn on spring loaded trailer jacks will also help increase the life of the springs, by preventing spring shock. This is where the spring loaded base slams up - the E-Z Handlyn adapter will allow the operator to use their foot to stop that motion, thus maintaining an easy opening and closing of the spring loaded base.all from a standing position.

New designs are also in the works for an E-Z Handlyn which will work for living quarters trailers. Check back to the website this summer for progress on this new product!
